

The old Utopias are sessile organisations ; the new must square itself to the needs of a migratory population, to an endless coming and going, to a people as fluid and tidal as the sea. It does not enter into the scheme of earthly statesmanship, but indeed all local establishments, all definitions of place, are even now melting under our eyes. Presently all the world will be awash with anonymous stranger men.

Now the simple laws of custom, the homely methods of identification that served in the little communities of the past when every one knew every one, fail in the face of this liquefaction. If the modern Utopia is indeed to be a world of responsible citizens, it must have devised some scheme by which every person in the world can be promptly and certainly recognised, and by which any one missing can be traced and found.

This is by no means an impossible demand. The total

A large blue billboard advertisement for the NYPD's drone program. The billboard features a black silhouette of a drone in the upper right, with a white line representing a signal or flight path that loops around and ends in a white arrow pointing towards three black silhouettes of people running in the lower left. The background of the billboard shows a faint, blue-tinted image of a city street scene with cars and buildings. At the bottom center, the NYPD logo is displayed next to the text "NYPD" in large, bold, white letters. To the right of "NYPD", the word "DRONES" is written in bold, yellow letters, followed by the tagline "PROTECTION WHEN YOU LEAST EXPECT IT" in smaller white letters. Two NYPD police department shields are positioned on either side of the "NYPD" text. In the bottom right corner of the billboard, there is a small logo that says "AM NYC".
